His story told: Struggling for life among civil wars in Sudan

UN Specialist Jean-Marie Stratigof poses with transfer student from Sudan, Africa, James Tuor. After 20 years of living amongst civil war and violence in his country, he is excited to start his first year at Pacific in the School of International Studies.

Pacific's realm of contact with contemporary global issues increased this year when transfer student James Tuor from the country of Sudan in Africa joined the School of International Studies (SIS).

In 1987, at seven years old, Tuor left his home and his family and traveled barefoot across his country, ravaged by violence, with thousands of other young men to a refugee camp in Ethiopia. The people of Sudan were at war with each other.

Less than a year later he was forced to leave again. The boys fled this time to Kenya where they lived for nine years in another refugee camp. The young men who had made it to the refugee camps were given the nickname "Lost Boys," since they had no parents.

In 2001 Tuor was allowed to leave the violence and go to the United States with the US refugee agency and lived in San Jose.

On Monday night Tuor told his story to the Pacific community. Accompanying speakers included French United Nations regional specialist and temporary SIS faculty member Jean-Marie Stratigof, Professor Gene Bigler, and SIS Dean, Margee Ensign.

"This is a story, in my mind, of hope and resilience," said Ensign.

Ever since its independence in 1955, "Sudan has been in crisis," explained Tuor. The country has been in a constant state of civil war for many years. There is both a civil religious war between the northern and southern regions, as well as a civil war in the west. Tuor

Pacific helps victims of Katrina

University Relations

(September 8, 2005) - University of the Pacific has announced that it will take in up to 10 students who have been displaced because of Hurricane Katrina. The University will waive all tuition, room and board charges for the first semester, and provide academic assistance to students, who will be joining courses already in progress. Students from Tulane University, Xavier University of Louisiana and University of New Orleans already have accepted the offer and will be attending Pacific this fall.

The University is continuing to support relief efforts in other ways, as well. The University's catering service, Bon Appétit, donated all cash sales from the Summit Cafe on Tuesday, September 13, from 7:30 a.m. to midnight, to the American Red Cross.

On Sunday, September 18, Pacific's Conservatory of Music will hold a benefit concert, all proceeds of which will be donated to the American Red Cross. The concert will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Faye Spanos Concert Hall, and will feature performances by the Brubeck Institute jazz quintet, the Pacific Singers, and various faculty performers. Ticket donation price is $15. They can be purchased by email or by phone at

"A Concert that Cares"

The Conservatory of Music has put together an event that will bring the Stockton community together to raise money needed for relief.

On Sunday, September 18, at 7:30 p.m., a concert in Faye Spanos Concert Hall will feature the Brubeck Institute jazz quintet, Conservatory faculty, The Pacific Singers, and the Conservatory's elite chamber choir under the direction of Edward Cetto.

With tickets on sale for $15, all of the proceeds will go directly to the American Red Cross.

What started as an idea to help from a small group of students, grew into a larger and larger project. Members of the music sorority Sigma Alpha Iota decided to take their idea and team up with Mu Phi Epsilon and Phi Mu Alpha to create a concert available to everyone put on by the entire Conservatory.

"I am excited for our benefit concert because students, faculty, and community members have all come together to help those in need," said Lauren Zaslow.

"It's touching how many people have donated their time and energy to help is from southern Sudan.

"Women were taken for slavery, men were killed," said Tuor. He described the "misery" of the people of his country.

"This is a crime against humanity," said Stratigof. He also explained that undeniably containing some aspects of "ethnic cleansing," the situation in Sudan is considered to be one of genocide by some, and is not quite so as defined by the UN. However, due to the number of missions deployed by the UN and unpredictable crises such as last years tsunamis in South-east Asia or Hurricane Katrina in the Gulf Coast, "no African missions have been adequately funded."

Grecian Food Festival:

"The Spirit of Greece"

Margot Durand
Staff Writer

"We are so proud of who we are. We want to invite family, friends, and strangers to join in the celebration of Greece and our culture", said John Papachristios, the director and co-chairman of the 46th annual Grecian Food Festival.

The food festival was held at St. Basil Greek Orthodox Church on March Lane, on the 9th, 10th, and 11th of September. The Grecian culture was represented through ten food vendors, three goods vendors, two beer gardens, an entertainment stage, and an art gallery.

This festival occurs annually, and all of the food is made by members of the church as well as volunteers from the community. It is an opportunity for St Basil's Church to raise interest in their community and offer guided tours of their parish. Visitors come from all over the area in order to indulge in the Greek treats and to peek into their beautiful, family-oriented culture.

All of the food and goods stations had titles representing different Greek names. The foods were identified with the names of their origin. There were various different cousine options, such as Loukoumades (a delicious pastry), Dolmades and Poltitsio (lamb and pork dishes), Macaronada (a tri-tip pasta), various souvlaki, Greek salads, and gyros. Gyros are Grecian versions of the deli sandwich topped with a tzatziki sauce.

In addition to the food selections, the festival included live entertainment such as authentic dance shows and cultural music ensembles. The Greek bands traveled from the Bay Area to dazzle the crowds with their beloved traditional music.

Father Luke, the head of St. Basil's church explained that every year the church hopes for a lot of community involvement and interest in their cause. They open their doors to the public to share their faith. Not only members of the church attend the festival, but also a wide variety of people from all over Stockton come to enjoy the tradition and make it part of their yearly agenda.

Mr. Papachristios explained that, "the atmosphere is purely light hearted and it is a very fun environment." The festival was a celebration of Greek culture, generously shared with the Stockton Community.

Letter To the Editor:

Dear Pacifican Staff,
I stopped reading the Pacifican this morning after the front page when I got totally disgusted at your article on Katrina. I am a native of the Baton Rouge area, lots of displaced family and friends from New Orleans and found the article disgusting. Your article spouted only what has been in headlines on the national news, included no updates which started being published last week, nor did it contain factual data from OEP, DEQ or many of the STATE agencies which are working to rebuild New Orleans. If you had looked into items which do not make the associated press, do not make headlines on CNN,

Fox or other items which come on out here your article should have painted a very different picture for UOP students. What is worse is that your article is promoting a problem which the government of Louisiana is trying to get changed, there are not 10,000 dead, they have been saying that for over a week now, it will be in the thousands but last Sunday was when they said that number was far over inflated and that was in your first sentence of the article! Regarding your looting, stealing, shooting and other mentions to crime in the streets please go study your geography of New Orleans, the areas where those incidents were happening then go and correlate the two of them.

And while you're at it, why don't you focus on other areas of devastation and not just New Orleans --- there are some places in far far worse shape; thankfully you did not print a picture of a dead body like another local paper did, however a table of redcross volunteers does not really fit your article; if you want to get pictures that will convey the message of the devastation and destruction, I suggest that you go locate fly over pictures from Plaquemines Parish.

hold this concert. It is truly inspiring."

Producer Rebecca Hoerl said: "I was extremely excited to get involved because I am passionate about music and putting together a quality performance, but more importantly because I am passionate about this cause."

"The Conservatory's goal is to sell out Faye Spanos Concert Hall," said Sabrina Sutherland, one of the instrumental organizers of the concert.

A similar concert was held after the attacks on September 11 on Pacific's campus and was quite a success.

Ticket sales are not the only way that the concert will raise money for hurricane relief. Money will be raised to help the southern chapters of musical fraternities and sororities Sigma Alpha Iota, Phi Mu Alpha, and Mu Phi Epsilon who have lost their schools in the tragedy.

Of course, using music to heal during a hard time is nothing unusual for Conservatory students. When looking for a way to help, it seemed only natural.

"It is often hard to know how to help in times like these, and it is important for us to look to what we know best music," student Tara Marriott noted.

Tickets for the event may be purchased with cash or check only one hour before the concert, or by e-mail or telephone.

Women's Center opens at Pacific

Jennifer Hite-Smith
Editor-In-Chief

The Raymond Lodge, located next to the dining hall is the home for the first women's center on campus. Nicknamed C.A.R.E. (Community, Advocacy, Resources, Education), the center is a place where women can gather safely to share and support one another. It is open Monday - Thursday 12-9pm and Friday until 5pm.

It also provides confidential advocacy services to report abuse and harassment, along with referral information for both men and women. The Student Victim Advocate will be available every Monday at 4pm in the CARE center.

CARE will be involved in the promotion of many other programs and events on the Pacific campus including Women of the World (WOW), Lunafest, and the Women's Leadership Conference.

Kerry Krueger-Devine, a major contributor to the creation of a women's center, opened the center with a ribbon cutting ceremony last Thursday, September 8. Surrounded by both men and women who came to celebrate the opening, Krueger-Devine welcomed everyone, those present and those who will use the facility in the years to come. "I just dig women," said Krueger, and added after laughter from those standing around her husband, "I dig men, too."

ASUOP president, Mindy Krizman also spoke at the ribbon cutting event, a woman in a leadership role on campus. "I think it's [the CARE center] great for everybody," she said.

"Feminism" has been reduced to the F-word," exclaimed Kreizman. Kreizman also explained that feminism does not mean women hate men; "I think it's ok for us to be feminists again," she added.

Vice President, Julie Sina had an active role in CARE and did the actual cutting of the ribbon to open the center. "Women have challenged me," said Sina when talking about the importance of women's roles in her life; "we will challenge each other here."

According to both Krueger-Devine and Sina, there was "incredible support" from many parts of campus, including the Provost, Phil Gilbertson, and Director of Athletics, Lynn King.

The CARE center is also open for those who wish to volunteer to be in the center while it is open. The first volunteer, Kara Buchanan, a graduate student, said she was encouraged to help out because of the contagious enthusiasm from Krueger-Devine.

"It's going to be a great opportunity for so many women," said Buchanan. "It's Kerry's enthusiasm that makes it such a great thing to be a part of."

Website posting brings out Secret Service

A University of Louisville student is questioned about comments made online

By Shane Cipris
Perspectives Editor

It is getting dangerous to be a voice of political dissent these days. Last week in Kentucky, a University of Louisville student found this out the hard way when he was visited by the Secret Service after posting an Internet message regarding the aftermath of hurricane Katrina. Philip Bailey, a 21-year old student who is chairman of the school's Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, was responding to a previous comment on the message board saying that looters in New Orleans should be shot on sight.

In his posting, Bailey countered that in many cases, the 'looters' were doing what they had to in order to survive, and added, "I say shoot every cop, national guard and politician who stands in your way, including George W. Bush if need be."

This choice of words led to a local chapter of the Fraternal Order of Police alerting the Secret Service about the posting on the Web site the-soulution.com. After being interviewed by the Secret Service, Bailey clarified his statements and noted that he was not advocating violence, stating "I'm advocating that people defend themselves and survive."

The special agent in charge of the Secret Service office in Louisville has stated that it will be up to the U.S. attorney's office to decide whether or not to charge Philip Bailey with making threats to the president. Ominously, such a charge can carry a five-year sentence for what should be a constitutionally-protected expression of free speech. Bailey's comment, after all, was a hypothetical statement that reflected his frustration and anger with the inefficient and lackluster response by the government in the wake of a disaster that had been predicted well in advance.

I visited the Web site in question, a pro-black site that bills itself as "The People's Paper," and was gratified to see that the editorial board strongly supports Bailey's right to free expression, even in the wake of all the controversy caused by his comments. The official statement read in part, "Mr. Bailey's

University life brings new responsibilities

By Claire Thompson
Staff Writer

Many things have changed since summer vacation ended. We have become full time students and completely responsible for our own schedules. We have no one here to make us do our work or get to class on time. Skipping class is a decision that is completely our own and we have to live with the guilt and consequences. So, how do we coax ourselves into becoming an adult and no longer a high school senior. The senior slide has officially ended and college has begun.

Key points to getting used to classes are motivation, organization and determination. We have to be motivated to get out of bed, even when we aren't feeling one hundred percent. Classes are going to start whether we're there or not, and the teachers actually do notice when we skip. "Attendance is not required" does not mean "it's okay to skip." It is crucial to keep an alarm set, or sleeping in becomes a reality.

So what happens when class is out for the day, and exhaustion is setting in from studying the night before? Taking a nap after classes has become a way of life for many people. "Napping is the best part of the day after an early morning class," said Sarah Fountain, a freshman who lives in Grace Covell.

In high school, my parents always told me that I really shouldn't go out until my homework was done. It was always my choice, but now I really am the one making the choice and not having that reminder can be difficult. Keeping a planner can be a saving grace when it comes to remembering homework assignments. Sometimes it's even difficult for me to remember which pages of which book to read.

"The senior slide has officially ended..."

One main thing I recommend for each class, is a buddy. Then when you really aren't feeling great, or you just can't make it to class, you will have someone who can help with your assignments and give you notes to copy. It doesn't have to be someone you spend time with 24/7, but it helps to have someone you trust to keep you on track when you can't be there.

Another important part is getting on good terms with your professors. Getting to class on time and being prepared helps to score points with your teachers. If you turn your first assignments in on time, when it comes down to the nail and you don't have one done, it will help to have a good record.

Lastly, as corny as it may sound, it is ideal to have a study group. Not necessarily your friends--due to distractions--but a small group of people that will help you focus and understand the material assigned. Teaching other people is one of the best ways to prove that you know your material.

These are my study habits that I'm learning. I find it helps to share the 'tricks of the trade' so that when my friends or classmates have smart ideas they will share them with me. Excelling in academics is the main goal.

AP's: So lame!

By Marcel Gibson
Columnist

So, last week I was sicker than a freshman's first night with booze. It was a total knock-out; I was comatose on the bed while a Niagara Falls worth of snot poured from me nostrils.

It was so bad that I didn't have a single beer the entire week and, of course, missed all my classes. Since I thought I was going to die, I wrote out my will and, of course, emailed my professors.

Then I found out that one of my classes had an Attendance Policy requiring me to get a doctor's note or my absence would be unexcused. Since I already had used up one unexcused absence due to a hangover, and I was planning on wasting the other two unexcused absences for similar reasons, I ended up going to the doctor for the damn note.

The doctor laughed at me, saying, "Can't your professor see that you're sick?" Hell yeah he could, and the doctor and I got to talking. What would college be like without attendance policies? How many students would actually go to class?

Attendance Policies come in all shapes and sizes, from daily quizzes to participation scores. No matter what form they take, they are all communist plots to curtail the students' (and market's) natural tendency to sleep-in over sitting in on wellredusa.com

Are the attendance policies part of a sinister communist plot?

a boring 8 A.M. class. Basically, we found that attendance policies are commie devices controlling the free, capitalist market of ideas.

These policies serve only to protect certain professors from the cold and hard truth; we're sitting here and we're bored off of our collective asses! Half the class isn't sleeping because of a crazy church gathering on Sunday night. We're sleeping 'cause you're speaking in monotone and we simply cannot fight the heaviness in our eyes any longer.

These policies spread disease too. See, there is always that "go-getter" student who's sick and clinging to her last breath, but makes it to class anyway so as to not miss the quiz or lose half-a-percent on her participation grade. She'll cough while she answers all the questions, and then get everyone else sick on campus.

Lastly, these policies simply degrade students. We all left the hell-hole called High School, so this required attendance and "notes from mom" crap should stay with the hell-hole and they have no place on this university campus.

If there was no communist infiltration, a student would go to class and listen in on the professor. If the professor was simply regurgitating the textbook, then the student would never go back to class except for test days. The sick students would stay home, and we all would feel less like high schoolers.

Anyway, the doctor gave me the note, laughed and drew a smiley face on it, and sent me away with a Popsicle. I ended up showing the note to all my professors, and most of them couldn't have cared less. But to that one professor...

This beer's for you.

Slam Poetry sensation

Sports editor gets in touch with sensitive side

By Arash Scott Behnam
Sports Editor

Slam Poetry is a form of performance poetry that occurs within a competitive poetry event, called a "slam," at which poets perform their own poems (or, in rare cases, those of others) that are 'judged.'

Slam Poetry made its presence felt on the Pacific campus Tuesday night in the Summit and it was quite a show. Although slam poetry has many critics in the literary field, its structure is no doubt powerful.

In some shows, artists 'battle' each other and the audience play an active role in who goes on to the next round and whose night ends. Slam Poetry is no doubt different as passion is emphasized, emotions portrayed, with words contributing to every image.

Slam Poetry has been in the underground circuit for many years and has strong ties with hip-hop music. Slam Poetry is spreading quickly to new circles consisting of every color, sex, and sexual preference. As Slam Poetry is about 'heart' and the right to express ones self or ideas with literary context, it knows no bounds. This attraction gives Slam Poetry the credibility it needs to battle all the criticism surrounding this new phenomenon.

Beat that nagging cold

A perennial favorite, good for what ails you

By Courtnee Coburn
Staff Writer

That ugly, coughing monster has once again reared its massive head and is spreading the cough, sore throat, runny nose, and sheer exhaustion we call the common cold. With the beginning of the school year, the student's ailments seem to have landed on the campus of UOP with great force.

"It seems like everyone in my hall has been sick lately," said freshman Dominic Cosciato. "Last week some girl a couple of doors down had a couple of doors down had a everyone is sick."

In the midst of too many classes, laborious studying, and attempting to have fun

olin.msu.edu

at the same time, it is easy to forget about the things Mom and Dad were always there to take care of.

But now that we are big, independent college students it is time to get a good night's sleep, take some vitamins, and start feeling better. It is easy to get caught up in the whirlwind of school, and wind up feeling quite under the weather.

What to do when classes and college life are getting the best of you? "Eat a lot of chicken soup," said Tim Reeve, freshman. So drink lots of fluids, take vitamin C, and don't let your busy, hectic schedule get the best of you. Because lets face it, nobody wants to sit next to the sick kid in class with the dripping nose and loud cough, much less be that kid.

comments represent the freedom of speech granted to each citizen of this nation. We stand by our brother 100%, and his comments....We will continue to defend our right to express ourselves and our free speech by any means necessary."

It is odd to see how quick and efficient the Secret Service is when it comes to investigating disaffected (but ultimately non-threatening) young men who post messages on pro-black Web sites. Compare this speedy response to the bizarre inaction of the Secret Service on the morning of September 11, 2001 when they completely failed to ensure Bush's safety by letting him dawdle in a Florida classroom for twenty minutes during the worst terrorist attack in U.S. history. The Secret Service certainly seems to have strange priorities.

While browsing the-soulution.com, I read several news articles that were linked to the site. One notable article also involved the University of Louisville, the school attended by Philip Bailey. Early this month, the hate group KKK was allowed on the university campus, where two Klan members handed out pamphlets and tried to recruit students. The Klan had been trying to get onto the campus for over a year, and now that they are there, plan on returning every Tuesday.

"The Secret Service seems to have strange priorities"

Despite the sick and despicable history of the KKK, its modern-day members are still protected by the free speech clause of the First Amendment and are even allowed to spread their filthy racist views on university campuses. On a moral level, a terrorist organization such as the KKK should have long ago forfeited the right to be protected by freedom of speech, but instead the government concerns itself with dissident students. The situation presents a most bizarre scenario: a university student is harassed by the homegrown Gestapo for expressing his views, while a terrorist hate-group marches on his campus under the auspices of the school administration.

LIFESTYLES

Fear and Loathing on a College Campus

Homeless to purchase iPod Nano

By Mikey Vu
Lifestyles Editor

Oh Pacific. Why do you toy with my emotions so? I once loved you with a burning passion that rivaled a thousand suns, but now, the love that remains is nothing more than an embittered ember that softly flickers against the remains of a shattered dream. Why the cause for this poetic hyperbole you may ask? Because my beloved Pacific is trying to become a dry campus. I know you're just trying to fit in with the other schools around the nation, but just be yourself. Don't try to do things out of character, just because it's what all the other "cool" schools are doing. Be true to your roots, because all I can say is if you just be yourself everyone will love you for what you are, which is very drunk. So my advice to you Pacific is don't fall into the traps of peer pressure, the next time someone tries to force you into being a dry campus, just say no.

In other news, Apple unveiled its new line of iPods recently, the iPod Nano. Now for those of you haven't seen them, don't feel bad, they're just that small. They're pretty cool looking I'll give it that, but there has to be a limit to how small electronics should be allowed to get. First there was the introduction of the pint sized Nokia phones, and as if that weren't enough, people started to accessorize with the nearly invisible cell phone earpieces that could make any normal person look like a schizophrenic. There have been countless times where I've seen people seemingly babbling away to themselves believing that they were crazy hobos, when really they were just on the phone. While this is true, there has also been many times when I've assumed someone is on their earpiece only to realize that they are indeed a crazy hobo. Either way, it's quite a sight to see someone have an argument with themselves over what time they're coming home.

Back to the iPod Nano, I don't really understand the appeal of having something so expensive that can be so easily misplaced. My best bet is that kids who just must have that latest trendy accessory to show off to the world will be purchasing the iPod Nano in hordes, but what about the majority of college students who can't afford one? Here's my solution, and it'll only cost you $10. Go to the Tiger Grocery Store, and ask them for a pack of matchbooks. Now open the matchbook up, take a pair of headphones and tape the plug to the matchbook. Now wear it taped to your arm proudly when you're at the gym and voila! Now you can look like a fully functional trendwhore all while on the budget of a hobo! And as long as you're not having conversations with yourself, you'll be in good shape.

Summer Music in Review

Will Stevensen
Guest Writer

The past 6 months have disproved the myth of the sophomore slump. The release of Fall Out Boy's Under The Cork Tree, The Starting Line's Based On A True Story, and Motion City Soundtrack's Commit This To Memory at the beginning of the summer signaled the start of a number of amazing releases over the next couple of months. To be perfectly honest, to talk about all the albums that were released this summer would take a multi-volume novel, and the time which neither you or I have. Since we have had 3 month break, we have a lot of catching up to do. I am just going to tell you what is worth listening to and why it is worth buying. Expect more summer reviews next week.

If you don't already have this Album, then you need to stab, steal, kill your way to get it right now:

Fall Out Boy - Under The Cork Tree

Release Date : 05/03/05

-In case you lived under a rock this summer, then chances are that you heard about Fall Out Boy. With their entrance into the MTV scene, Fall Out Boy proves that even 13 year old girls like their music. Their second release they proved that they are here to stay, and have a lot more to offer to its listeners. This album showed that Fall Out Boy was able to mature musically without changing their sound all together. I still prefer Take This To Your Grave, but if you like old FOB, then you will enjoy this new material as well.

Songs To Listen To : "Of All The Gin Joints In All The World", "A Little Less Sixteen Candles, And A Little More Touch Me"

The Starting Line - Based On A True Story
Release Date : 05/10/05

- If you were to ask me what my favorite CD's of all time were, one of the titles I would list would be Starting Line's Say It Like You Mean It. So needless to say, I was extremely excited about TSL's full length sophomore release, Based On A True Story. Now if you are expecting to hear the same Starting Line that you are used to on their new album, then you might be in for a surprise. With a much more matured sound, The Starting Line doesn't come off as an 11 year-old girls wet dream any more. Their sounds has grown as the band members have grown with age. Song subject

Libra

The planets are moving out of alignment much like the alignment on your car. Do the old rust bucket a favor and change the oil or wash it in the smallest bathing suit you can find. Tonight, try and say your name backwards.

Scorpio

A cultural revolution is going on in your head, you must learn to tune into these visionary voices. Try to keep in open mind to crazy ideas like mud wrestling and finger painting. Tonight, adjust your shoe laces.

Sagittarius

Regardless of when your cell phone contract us up, you should think about your options in another provider. Or I suppose you could do what the stars told you to do last time and follow your friends like a lemming jumping to an icy death. Tonight, eat a popsicle with two sticks.

Capricorn

Images of John Lennon's ghost haunt you in your sleep, but I doubt you remember. The stars see this, just like that internet porn habit you have. Tonight, talk into a fan.

Aquarius

Strange occurrences plague campus and are infesting your soul as they spreads to north campus. Get out more and bring out the sleeping Grace monster in us all! Tonight play your music too loud.

Pieces

Like the effects of the salty fat free pretzel you long for something to quench your undeniable thirst for information. Tonight pretend you love William Shatners music.

Aries

You feel strong and powerful as you walk the dangerous campus streets in search of adventure. Take the bravado to the streets of downtown, flash some angry looks and show Stockton who's boss. Tonight, make sure your emergency card is filled out.

Taurus

Things are starting to look up for you as the 4th moon of Jupiter crosses the red spot thing. Remember not to let little things like misspelling names or Pauly Shore's new show get you down. Tonight watch a little CSPAN2.

Gemini

The electricity between you and the servers at the dining hall is flowing like the mighty Nile this week. To repay the hard work and service try giving them some of your food insted. Tonight, scratch your name in a chair.

Cancer

Bad karma stemming from an unknown location is affecting you in a negative way. Vanquish the demon within by not leaving your house for a fortnight. Tonight, let them have cake.

Leo

Your feelings of desperation and sadness since the last moon are not due to earthly happenings. Reverse the bad juju by seeking out the largest phallic symbol on campus and leave a daisy at its sturdy base. Tonight contemplate what a grape-nut is.

Virgo

Like the tail of a comet your head runs wild with colors and toxic gas. Remember that some people do not share your multi-colored prospective on life and may need prodding. Tonight, spend a little more time trying to understand your horoscope.

Songs To Listen To : "Surprise, Surprise", "The B-List"

Motion City Soundtrack
- Commit This To Memory
Release Date : 06/07/05

-I will start off by saying this was one of the best CD's of the summer. Motion City Soundtrack's second released not only surpassed any expectations by fans of their first CD, but gained a large new following with this pop-punk delight. When you have Mark Hoppus, the bassist and singer of Blink 182 producing your album, then you know you are in for a treat. The band shows it growth with its pristine of use of a synthesizer and drum solos which were almost non-existent in their last album, I Am The Movie. This album is a must have for any fan of MCS, or pop-punk in general. If You don't have it, go get it now.

Sitting in the stands and watching the US Women's Soccer team beat Norway, then China at the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta. It was an unbelievable accomplishment for an exceptional team of athletes. The stadium went nuts!

Most embarrassing moment

Mmmm, so many to choose from. You would need a book, not a paper. Stick around you're bound to see one.

First ever thoughts of UOP and Stockton Wow, this is in the middle of Stockton! I can get used to this.

Favorite athlete and why
That's a tough one. I would have to say Joe Montana because the guy was just plain amazing. He knew what to do with a football.

Any Intramural advice
Have fun out there, be safe, and stop by every now and then to tell us how things are going. Also remember your number one priority should be your education, then maybe Intramurals.

Last year I was a women's rugby coach at a small college in northwestern Maryland. The only way I could get all of my team in one of our games was to give a player to the other team. It was our last game of the season, we were playing our arch enemies. After much contemplation I offered my services and my team was quick to get rid of me. Little did I know they had a wager: whoever tackled me the most would win. The really embarrassing part of it was they found out that I called in sick on that Monday because of their abuse. I was soo sore!

It's Bonds-Bonds baby

Arash-Scott Behnam
Sports Editor

With twenty games left in the season Barry Bonds returned to the Giants. After three knee surgeries, Bonds is back with hopes of inching his way closer to the heralded home run record set by Hank Aaron. Bonds' first at-bat brought back memories of his distinguished career.

While leading off the second inning to a standing ovation, you could see the emotion running through his face. Although he was emotional he didn't disappoint. He took a 3-2 fastball from Adam Eaton and hit a ground-rule double over the left-center field wall, which was only a few feet from number 704.

Although the Giants are having a less than spectacular season, they are mathematically still in the playoff race. Bonds return adds hope for the Giants, instantly making them a contender.

His return was not just for himself and his teammates, but for his love of the Giants' fans. "Truthfully, I felt I did not want to let the city down. That's the feeling you have out there. They came to see you play, and you really want to put on a good performance for them," Bonds said after the 4-3 victory Monday night. With six games left against San Diego the playoffs are a long shot, but with Bonds in the lineup nothing is impossible.

PACIFIC TRIUMPHS OVER UC DAVIS 11-7

Mike Milerick
Athletic Media Relations

STOCKTON, Calif. — The No. 14 Pacific men's water polo team ran their record to 4-2 on the season with an 11-7 non-conference victory over No. 11 UC Davis (3-3) on Sunday, Sept. 11, at Chris Kjeldsen Pool.

Three Tigers notched three goals apiece, as Pacific exploded for six goals in the final period of play to erase a two goal deficit. UC Davis saw a 3-2 lead after a period of play evaporate as Clint McLaughlin (El Cajon, Calif.) converted on two penalty shots, which tied the score at four at the half. The Aggies scored two goals in the third period to the Tigers' one, then added the first goal of the fourth period to take a 7-5 lead, before the six straight goals that gave Pacific the victory. C. McLaughlin, Matt Turnbull (Act, Australia) and Kenny Yamamoto (San Juan Capistrano, Calif.) each recorded three goals, with Turnbull also adding four steals, an assist and a kick-out drawn. Goalkeeper Marko Popovic (Belgrade, Serbia) recorded six saves, three steals, and two assists.

Kevin Bacharach (Alamo, Calif.) and Patrick Jacobson (Santa Cruz, Calif.) paced UC Davis with two goals apiece.

Pacific is next in action next weekend, as they head to the SoCal Tournament Sept. 17-18 in Irvine, Calif.

Goalkeeper Marko Popovic denied the Aggie offensive throughout the whole game.

Overall Record: 5-2

San Francisco at Philadelphia

I would have never thought that the 49ers would be the 1-0 team coming into this game. They played excellent last week, especially their defense. The Eagles suffered a tough loss to the Falcons 14-10. The Eagles are a Super Bowl caliber team and they should shake off their Week 1 loss with a convincing victory. Look for TO to have a great game.

Eagles 27, 49ers 13

Oakland at Kansas City

The Chiefs made the better than average Jets look silly last week with a dominating win. Larry Johnson had over 100 yards rushing and Priest Holmes wasn't far behind. Their defense is what was most impressive though. Oakland played pretty well against New England and should still put up good offensive numbers. They will lose this game because of their lackluster passing defense, which will be exposed by Tony Gonzalez all game.

Chiefs 34, Raiders 20

Minnesota at Cincinnati

The Vikings looked awful last week after losing to an average Buccaneers team. Daunte Culpepper had 4 turnovers and was without a TD. Cincinnati is my favorite to be a breakout team this year and they proved it last week. Rudi Johnson, Carson Palmer, and Chad Johnson lead the Bengals' potent offense. I do not expect Culpepper to have another bad week, but I think the Bengals defense will slow down the Vikes enough for the victory. This, I think, will be a close one.

Bengals 31, Vikings 27

San Diego at Denver

I don't know why Denver is favored by 3 in this game after the embarrassing loss to the Dolphins last week. They had no sign of consistency on offense and their defense made Gus Frerotte look like Peyton Manning. San Diego was without Antonio Gates against Dallas, which cost them a close game. He will be back this week and will catch a TD. Ladanian Tomlinson is spectacular and will give the Broncos fits all day. San Diego will win this game because of the inconsistency of the Broncos.

Chagers 27, Broncos 17

Buffalo at Tampa Bay

The Bucs are favored because of their great game against Minnesota in Week 1. Do not expect that to happen again this week. The Bills looked even better last week with great defense and a steady offense. Willis McGahee ran for 115 yards and JP Losman was impressive in his first start as the number one QB. The game will not be full of offensive fireworks and the Bills defense will pressure Brian Griese a lot.

Bills 23, Buccaneers 10

Washington at Dallas

This Monday night game features two great defenses that will create problems for their opposing offenses. The Cowboys looked very good in their victory against the Chargers and should become 2-0 after this game. Mark Brunell, who is over the hill, is starting for the Redskins. Clinton Portis did have 121 yards last week, but the 'Skins had no offensive touchdowns against the Bears. Julius Jones will be enough again this week to combat a tough Redskins defense.

Cowboys 21, Redskins 13

Detroit at Chicago

Joey Harrington had 2 touchdowns and 0 turnovers last week, which is what the Lions have been waiting to see for a couple of years. Their defense only gave up 3 points against the Packers and Brett Favre threw 2 interceptions. The Bears also proved they have a good defense by only giving up 9 points in a loss to Washington last week. The Bears have the worse starting QB in the NFL, Kyle Orton, and the Lions will win in impressive fashion.

Lions 27, Bears 10
